

What We've Heard So Far...

Community Stakeholder Workshops

The first step of the engagement process for Cloverley was a stakeholder workshop, which took place on Thursday, January 30. Attendees included representatives of neighbourhood associations identified by the City of North Vancouver and in close proximity to Cloverley. The workshop format offered the opportunity to share community perspectives from neighbourhood representatives in a focused, small-group environment. The same general questions are being asked to the broader community today.

Photos from the Cloverley Community Stakeholder Workshop, January 30

Outcomes from the Cloverley Workshop

Participants broke out into smaller groups for a facilitated discussion based on the following two questions:

1. What are some of the important issues that should be considered for the future of the Cloverley site? What, if any, are your concerns?
2. What are some of the greatest opportunities that could be considered for the future of the Cloverley site, considering what we know about it being both a lever and a place for learning?

Based on the notes taken during the small group discussions, the following key themes emerged:

Cloverley Workshop - Top Emergent Themes

Important Issues

- Concern about loss of green space (that is currently used as park space)
- Concern about loss of tennis courts and other community uses
- Concern about too much densification generally in the City of North Vancouver
- Concern about traffic
- Concern about meeting future educational needs

Greatest Opportunities

- Senior housing and/or daycare
- Retention of green space currently used as park
- Urban agriculture and green roofs
- Community uses such as recreational opportunities, theatre, and community centre

A full transcription of the notes from each workshop can be found on the project website and on information tables at this Open House.