

Making Interesting Images

Personified Images

For this skill, we used the Mark-up feature to add to photos. Before this, we had taken photos with an object as the main subject and gone for a photo walk, where we practiced background/foreground, rule of thirds. I was pretty happy with the photos with the snowman and the basketball, but in the bottom right picture, I think that I could have gotten more of the dragon in the shot and made the background nicer.

Rule Of Thirds

The rule of thirds is where, if your camera view is split into a grid, the main subject is lined up where two lines meet.

Angles

For this skill, we experimented with different angles. The top picture was taken using bird's eye. The main subject (Sunny and Esther) was centred (instead of the rule of thirds). I could have also adjusted my angle slightly so that the hand rails created leading lines down to the subject. For the bottom one, I liked the way I made the hat a lot bigger than Sunny, but still like it was over her head. I also didn't use rule of thirds in this one and I think it would have been better if the hat wasn't cut off.

self portrait

For this activity we created, well, self portraits. During this sector we also learned how to make silhouettes, which I included on this slide too. For the self portrait, I used the timer on selfie mode, jumped up and then adjusted which frame was the key shot. Unfortunately, the image quality turned out a bit fuzzy.

While creating silhouettes, I learned how to adjust the exposure to make the main subject darker, with out make the background darker too. For this silhouette, I got a friend to take the photo and then I applied a black and white filter, to make the silhouette stand out better.

A Portrait From The Past

For this assignment, we had to recreate a photo. You can see mine on the right. I unfortunately didn't have a lot of similar clothing to the original photo, but I think that it was close enough considering the time and materials I had. If I were to retake it, I think that definitely finding pink pants would be one thing I would improve on.

The original photo was taken in a local forest, but unfortunately, when I went there, the area where the stump was had been closed off for filming. And somehow, though I was in the middle of a forest, I couldn't find a similar stump, so I ended up using the short, very mossy stump that you can see in the recreation picture. When I got home, I applied a filter in the photos app so that the photos looked more similar. If I were to go back and retake this photo again, I would, as mentioned, improve on finding pink pants, try to find a more similar stump and also reverse what hand I had showing, because it should have been the other one.
