

A hundred years ago life on earth was not the same. In fact some things are the same as they were before, but most have changed. There were different people, places, and things. For example Deep Cove used to be called 'Deep Water' but that was before the road was paved and there were not trees everywhere. About one hundred years ago in 1920 there was a street called Gallant Ave. This street was and still is the main Deep Cove street. It was a dirt road with small shops like one for gas and oil.

Lots of things have changed in the last one hundred years but here's just a few ideas of what it was like back then. First of all the road was just a dirt road, there were just a few buildings along the it and a bunch of trees. Deep Cove was pretty busy because it was the main place to go. It was easy to access because it is right beside the water so people could get there in many ways but the most popular ways were by vehicle, canoe, or ferry. Another thing which has changed is all the trees. Most of them were cut down and used as lumber to sell and trade, as well as to create things. This lumber was very popular because it was known to have not many knots. Knots in the lumber is bad because it makes the wood less sturdy and not very durable. This made it very valuable so it was big in the industry.

Along with that there's the things which have stayed the same like the beautiful mountains in the background with the refreshing water. I personally love going to deep cove just to sit and enjoy the sun and the beautiful view. Another thing is that there is also still a big logging industry in Deep Cove area.

Then there are the things which have completely changed. One of those things is that main road is all paved and is wider for more cars to drive through, because the population is so much bigger. There is also electricity to provide lamp posts on the side of the road along with telephone poles. There are also way more shops with all different types of food from candy, to sushi, and even donuts and sandwiches. Another thing that has completely changed is the amount of housing in the Cove.

These changes impact the way I live today because I often visit Deep Cove to enjoy the community. I enjoy the candy store and restaurants, I also love to go paddle boarding. Deep Cove is a great place to paddle board because the water is very calm.

I personally feel most of the changes in Deep Cove have been positive because the increase in housing, shops and restaurants has created a new community for everyone to enjoy.
